a twenty-five year old transsexual mama of two in-laws, "no!" the library, small town life, pokey river rocks, & more!

by Katie Kaput

This meadow grass is getting tall!

Maybe we need a goat!

Bizzy needs a 1.1-1.1-1.1-1.1 good!
It hasn't been long since night but I find that, like always, I have a lot to talk about—so hopefully you enjoyed the first issue & are looking forward to this second one.

If you never saw the first one & perhaps don't even know me, here is a Katie recap:

I'm twenty-five years old, I've been out as a transsexual girl for more than ten years, I have a six year old son named Rio & a two year old daughter named Rory (although she often calls herself Boz, Bozzy, or the Red Kid) who I am homeschooling with my ex-partner-but-still-co-parent-and-great-friend E.

We all live in a little house in the big woods in Mendocino.
County, with our three chickens (Pomegranate, Josephine, & Henrietta).

In the fall, we will all be moving back to Portland, OR, where I expect we shan't be so isolated & sometimes lonely.

Maybe the chickens will feel a little more isolated, 'cause now they live near more than thirty other chickens, but I, for one, as a young queer radical transsexual mama, shall feel a reduced sense of singularity & oddity, & I think the kids will like being in a place with lots more unschoolers.

Love, Katie

One Cranky Mama Ranting

I have this reputation for being really stable and easy-going, not at all moody, which is funny because I grew up in a big... "expressive"... Italian & Irish family, but I am mostly pretty subdued. Stoic even.

Now, though, there's almost always some crankiness bubbling under my surface. Most people just ask if I'm tired or something 'cause I seem out of it, but on the inside lately I'm doing a lot of screaming. E. always notices & I'm sure the kids pick up on it.

So now I'm gonna try to let a little of it out & hopefully... it will turn out mildly entertaining or enlightening for you. If not, I promise some cute & funny comics later!

Alright, now that half my audience is thumbing through looking for the funny comics, I can talk to you.

My problem is simple: in-laws. Only they aren't my in-laws. E. & I were never married & now we're broken up. But I'm still stuck with them!

And until the fall, we are living about fifty feet from them in the Little House. I love the Little House.
It is little it has us in it!
But they live in the Big House,
& they are my neighbors!
I know, of course, that they are sweet & supportive, but my emotional responses to living so close to them go like this-

1. They have no lives, so they are sucking mine. Umm...
   - Oh, ya, leaving for the beach now? Just give me an hour to get ready...
   - Yaa, Grandma!

2. They have lives, & they want me to provide the kids to them whenever they have a dull moment.
   - So bring 'em over. Ya, Grandpa.
   - But we're going out.
   - Out I'm available! ...
   - So bring 'em over.

3. They want to give me lots of advice - the kind not even my parents give me.
   - You should go to school.
   - But I hate school.
   - You'd be good at it!
   - You owe it to yourself & your kids. Blah, blah, blah...

4. They are setting me up for doom!

Grandma said you'd help us train our chicken to build a flying machine...
I just want to pretend for twenty minutes that they're not living on top of us, but every time I try, they show up with unsolicited advice about how I'm ruining our strawberry plants & should really try doing blah blah blah...

It's almost enough to kill my homeschooling buzz! 'Cause our flow is so interrupted so much of the time.

I know, or think I know, that a lot of this is in my head, or in my reactions, but I also have my feelings & they are driving me wild with the itch to get away!

I think things will equalize & be good when we move to Portland - I've known them for years but only started hating them since we moved.

Maybe the real message is this -

Katie Kaput was not meant for communal living.
"How about 'no'!?"

Rory is almost two...

Rory, how about we get on yr sunscreen now?

This shirt? No! This one? No! No!

Will you say yes to something?!!

"No" to everything!

No yet, but soon!

When will you put something on so we can go to the park?!!

How about we go to the beach instead, so you can stay naked?

Sure!

Will you mind getting a sandy butt? Yes!

How about cover yr butt with some underwear then?

How about "no"!? The End.
The Library

Anyone who knows me knows I love libraries—sure, I love books, but more than that it’s the ideals embodied in public libraries—access to information (and guidance in accessing that information, when requested) for all!

Unfortunately, our local library here in Fort Bragg is staffed primarily by people who either are generally grumpy or who hate me and my children specifically.

Lots of interactions like this:

Thanks. Thank Buzzy loves books!

— She’s too loud. You’re getting a LOT of books. If you keep that book a day longer you’ll sure to accrue massive fines.

SLACKER!

I may have added the “SLACKER” part after the fact.

It's gotten to the point where, since the children's room is right near the checkout desk, we go in as fast as we can and flee with our choices as soon as possible.

I'm generally opposed to this kind of job-cutting automation, but I wonder if they've considered a self-checkout machine.

Bozzy loves books!

"can't you shut her up?!?"
zzt!

Why isn't it thick like a book? Don't ask me! I'm just the artist!
E and the Circumpolar Constellations

E. takes me out at night, even though mosquitos love me. It’s so dark here I can’t see a thing on the ground—she takes me out to share the stars with me.

She’s learning the circumpolar constellations, even though she loses me at the Big Dipper. I’m learning them, too.

The first time I see Polaris I want to have somewhere to navigate to by it—Portland is north, you know.

I love the stars—without E. they don’t take on shapes, but I love the humbleness they call out in me.

There’s nothing like being humble in company.
Same-sex Marriage Legal in California

Today the cover of the paper was about a ruling that barring same-sex couples from marrying is unconstitutional in California - heartwarming pictures of dykes & fags celebrating!

Even though I have mixed feelings on the topic of marriage, the pictures were cute, especially for me to be seeing in this small town with so little queer visibility.

Some tourists were shaking their heads & looking at their paper but not answering their kid's questions. Rio asked what it was all about, so I answered for everyone:

"What's the paper about?"
"It's about those two men on the cover, or those two women can get married. It's kinda weird, but some people want only couples that include one monogamous woman. Blah."

"Well, I never!"
A Day on the Navarro River

It's hardly ever really hot here, but yesterday it was humid & in the 90's even though it's still early May... So we went to swim in our favorite river. I forgot that I need some sandals, so every step was very painful.

E., Rio, & Rory all had good shoes, so they ran & jumped & played while I shifted my weight around, trying to find a non-stabbing position. I had remembered my parasol, so I was protected from the intense laser rays of the sun.
people passing in kayaks felt compelled to yell "Nice umbrella!"

It was the best day in a long time, even if my feet are begging me never to walk on them again. Even if Rio's shoe almost lodged a way—thank goodness E. rescued it, since I can't swim. She's a superhero, at least in Rio's eyes.

We all skipped stones & I did an over-9 skip (we lost count) & Rio got some 4's!

New Rio is tall! Opps!
The best part was taking turns riding this little rapid—we'd sit down & it'd carry us away!

It was good to be reminded that while I have my princess, sore-feet—hiding-under-a-parasol side, I also have my adventurous rapid riding side. I like how they co-exist these days. Now if I could just carry my parasol down the rapid...
A Katie Flashback: Gotta Be a Grrl

when I was 13, I'd "wanted to be" a girl for as long as I could remember... (age 11, old Katie) so this time I wanna play a female even if it's... ok?

And now that I was in middle school in a new town, being a "sissy" to "fag" was making me distinctly unpopular.

I dunno why, but a girl named Liz, later to become a great friend, gave me a mix tape. I listened to it somuch I tried to figure out what to do. "We're Bikini Kill, if we want real punk, Grrrl-style Now!"

I wrote Liz a note + prepared to die...

Dear Lie-

Thank you for the tape. I want to be a girl somehow.

She wrote back + nobody killed me,

Dear Grrrl,

Okay. So what's your name gonna be?

- Liz

Well, nobody killed me more than usual. In a fit of inspiration, I named myself after Kathleen Hannah, the lead singer of Bikini Kill. Can inspiration to later turn out quite ironic due to her support for excluding transgender women from the Michigan Women's Music Festival.

They didn't kill me much more than usual, so...

At the nerdy lunch table... so call me Katie, okay? Or not? Just say "she!"

The next day... yr so gross, fag! you wanna be a girl?

The next next day... "You want me to look up yr skirt, fag?"

It got worse so gradually that I wasn't scared away from my truth. And it was all good preparation for the rest of my life as a transsexual grrrl.

Liz moved away + I lost my spot at the nerdy lunch table... but I would've rather been a grrrl if taken my lumps + lost all my friends than let anyone think I'd be a boy for a second of the rest of my life... I'm Katie Kaput + I want revolution girl-style now!

THE END
Random Cute Things

1. Rory said:
   - Mama, you have blood in your eye!
   - Idiot!
   - Why is Rory so talk? Is she a teen? genus.
   - Yeah! I peed it out!

2. When the neighbor's dog killed some of our chickens, the neighbor was guilt-stricken and angry. Rio said:
   - Lucky's a good dog, but when he doesn't understand the rules, he sometimes breaks them. Exactly!

3. We went to see some jazz at the coffee shop—after ten minutes of watching the drummer, Rio said...
   - I need to go home RIGHT NOW.
   - Ten minutes later, at home...

4. We were in the woods playing with sticks. Rio started yelling at Rory for poking him. I asked him not to be so harsh with her, because she wouldn't poke him with a stick on purpose. Rory started crying, and when we asked why, she said:
Living in this town...

...has taught me a lot. Especially when coupled with breaking up with E. after so many years of being kissy-kissy-sweeties with her.

These his are same-letter married.

I've learned that, though I'd make a great pioneer-farm-girl-homesteader, I can't live without a community context, and that being queer & a feminist & having "radical" politics are too important for me to not have them in common with other people around me.

Not like when I was seventeen & everyone needed to be a radical dyke & I had to cut off the transsexual part of me among other parts) so I'd be the same too.

But not at all like when I was 21 & trying so hard to believe that being a homeschooling mama & a partner to E. & hanging out with rich straight folks exclusively (the exclusive part is the problem, not the straightness... homeschooling is always gonna have me rubbing elbows with rich straight folks) could be all there was to me & I wouldn't die or get lost.

I did get lost & this town has been helping me find my way back to myself & my communities. And now that I'm securing my self, I can be friends & build community more effectively with people "not like" me. Even in this town.
I'm writing this with E. in the house, 'cause otherwise I couldn't even let myself think about it. I probably won't ever read this over again 'cause...

I get scared. I get really, really scared. And what I'm scared of is mostly other people (mostly men). I'm scared 'cause they've scared me & hurt me before & I'm scared that this time, the next time, will be worse.

I'm so scared at night or when I'm alone or if someone says they get scared or something creepy happened to them. A wave of heat washes over me & the world gets small & my heart beats fast & I think I'm gonna die.

And I know I could take some drugs for my panic & anxiety, I've probably got a disorder, but sometimes I think my panic and my blood pumping is all that's gonna save me + my kids (or just me, depending on if I'm truly alone).

I spend so much time under the covers or with my back in a corner, needing to pee but not willing to risk it, needing to sleep but not wanting to be that vulnerable, sleeping but waking up with a start for no identifiable reason.

Maybe it was the scary times I've had or the scary movies I watched as a little kid or maybe its the fact that who I am as a transsexual girl is largely a person potentially in danger, depending on the whims of the people around me, the ones who say they need to figure me out or say they want to spend some time alone with me...

I know I should take some classes & learn to beat some ass & I will, I will...

But now I'm just gonna remember what my brother showed me when he realized he wasn't the only one who wanted to pound me to dust.

He showed me how to make a fist & he let me try out what I could do with it.

I'm still scared, alone (or, at least in the world) in my house, even though I know I'm not the typical victim of anti-transsexual violence (I'm not a woman of color, I'm not Sex worker (regardless of what some guys think when I'm at my most attractive) & I'm not especially poor) and I'm not the typical victim of anti-woman violence (I'm transsexual, for one thing, although that isn't making me feel any safer).

But I'm vigilant & I know how to make a fist, & I have to hope that counts for something.

I debated not including this in the zine cause I was thinking of the (accurate) arguments about how trans women are less risk fetishize some kind of danger-glory, but then I was thinking of the fact that I do feel unsafe & I have had scary run-ins with people, even though I am definitely in less danger than a lot of trans women (as I mentioned above).

And I was thinking how rarely I hear non-trans women telling other non-trans women to shut up & stop pretending to be scared & in danger, & maybe there needs to be more talking about who is most at risk amongst them but also more space amongst us transwomen for being scared & angry.
A Katie Flashback: Double Standards

Once I went out with a friend and her housemates, none of whom I'd met before.

At the restaurant...

In the bathroom...

Hey, guys! Hey, thanks, sister. Hey, guys! Can't take your order?

I wish I had been able to say then what I would say now... "I'm outta here!" Instead, I took any thing almost anybody dished out.

Like the time at a party when a trans guy said that after this trans-girl & I got to get it to "smell like girls," again. I was right there & he felt fine saying it. I wish I'd felt fine calling him on it.
Sometimes Are Like This...

...I'm really cranky & Rio can't stop crying about every little thing & Rory just shoved him & now they're both crying 'cause Rio shoved her back...

Some times are like this.
And if you've got kids or you do someday, remind me & I'll remind you that some times are & some times aren't.
And when I think I've scarred them for life, remind me that we all have scars but I can kiss the wounds if I just breathe for a minute. And if I can't now & I act like a dragon...
I can later.
'cause some times aren't like this.
This place has lots of redwoods & douglas firs & manzanita & apple trees. It has huckleberries, blackberries, & salal berries.

The hummingbirds & scrub jays & steller’s jays & ravens & bumblebees & banana slugs always come to visit us.

Sometimes when I wake up, I hear nothing but the wind in the trees. Sometimes I hear our chickens, or an owl, or my kids laughing or crying or saying “Wake up!”

Every now & then the deer in the morning meadow are joined by a wandering cow & even if cows do untold damage to meadows, she’s damn pretty and Rory moos at her.

When my bread is baking, the Little House is warm and smells good.

This place is where a little E. learned to walk and talk and climb trees. I climbed my first tree in years on a visit here, when I was still so unabashedly a city kid I didn't think I'd want to live somewhere like here.

Rory can find trilliums here. When we go to Portuguese Beach in the spring, the smell of lupines is overpoweringly wonderful.

This place is where I live now, even if I'm moving away (far the best).
